

This is a very interesting time in the history and evolution of Education for Health. I joined as the Chief Executive in September 2017 and am the third Chief Executive in the charity's 30-year life.

Since September I have been getting to grips with the day to day activities and starting to create a strong, innovative and dynamic strategy to see the charity into its second 30 years. This will build on the organisation's excellent reputation in delivering high quality education and training programmes, while modernising, flexing and testing new ways of working. One of the developments is the creation of an Innovations Unit which will enable us to test out new ideas and challenge the status quo of education and support in the health system.

Some great things are happening, for instance we are setting up a new Innovations Unit, reshaping our internal structure to streamline activities, widening our reach to include all primary care practitioners and growing our strategic partnerships with NHS colleagues and the pharmaceutical industry. So, as you can see, if you have drive and enthusiasm this is a great time to join us and be part of our exciting future!
