

Education for Health

Graduate Attributes

The Graduate attributes, personal qualities and transferable skills which students will have the opportunity to develop at Education for Health during the course of their studies are:

- An understanding of the broad clinical, intellectual, social and emotional intelligence skills required to deliver appropriate management to people living with, or at risk of long-term conditions and their carers.
- The ability to exercise critical judgement in evaluating sources of information, and the presentation of this information in a professional and appropriate manner to a range of a multi-disciplinary team members.
- The ability to work as self-directed, lifelong learners in possession of digital scholarship skills and creativity, which can be applied at personal and professional levels.
- An understanding of their own resilience and adaptability surrounding the promotion of behaviour change, service development and leadership capabilities within their work environment, and as professional, ethical and legal citizens